GLADWIN COUNTY PRESS RELEASE

Over a 48-hour period from May 16 to May 18, the area around the Edenville Dam in Gladwin received 6 to 8 inches of rain. A State of Emergency on May 18 was declared in response to the flooding. The Edenville Dam breached on May 19 at 1730, followed by the Sanford Dam in Midland County at about 1945. Both counties issued a state of emergency and Governor Whitmer issued subsequent requests to the federal government.

Historic flooding levels were seen throughout Gladwin County prior to the Edenville Dam breach. Physical impacts have been identified to residential drinking water wells. Information is being gathered to identify if these impacts are a result of flooding or related to groundwater levels changing in response to the breach. If homeowners are experiencing drinking water well issues or have concerns, please provide them the following resources below:

PROTECTING YOUR PRIVATE WATER SUPPLY IN AN EMERGENCY

Emergencies, such as power outages and flooding, can threaten the quality of drinking water from your water well system. This fact sheet reviews the potential hazards arising from emergency situations and gives advice on how to protect you and your family against illness.

Electrical power outage

Under normal operation an electric water pump draws groundwater from the well and maintains the water pressure within the storage tank and piping. Pressurization forms a physical barrier that protects the drinking water against the entrance of contaminants. During a power outage a water well system will lose pressure if faucets are opened. As a result, bacteria, viruses, and other disease-causing organisms can find their way into the water system. The water can become contaminated without any noticeable change in taste, odor, or clarity.

During extended power outages it is important to refrain from opening faucets, taking showers, or flushing toilets. While your water system may have several gallons of water in storage, withdrawing water while the power is out depressurizes the system and increases the risk of contamination.

If your water system loses all of its pressure (no water comes out of the faucet), it is a good idea to have the water checked for coliform bacteria.

Flooding

If flooding occurs around your water well, your drinking water may become contaminated. When flood waters rise over the top of the well, contaminants can enter through the well cap or vent and increase the risk of illness. The well can act as a drain as flood water cascades down the casing into the aquifer. Flood water contains bacteria and viruses from soil, organic debris, and sewage systems along with fertilizers, pesticides, and other chemical contaminants. Shallow wells and old, poorly-constructed wells (e.g. dug wells) are vulnerable to water quality changes when turbid flood waters deposit contaminants close to the well. Older wells located in below grade pits are vulnerable to contamination from flooding, even if flooding at the ground surface did not occur. Well pits are unsanitary and are prone to flooding after heavy spring rains or rapid snowmelt occur and surface water or the water level within the surrounding soil gathers within the pit.

If you use "city water," the risk of contamination is very low. Community wells are generally well protected from flood water. All community water systems are also carefully monitored by the water supply operator and the state. If your water supply does become contaminated, you will be notified promptly.

There have even been documented cases of a homeowner's well water becoming cloudy after a heavy rain. If you suspect your drinking water is contaminated, you should obtain water from a known safe source for drinking, cooking, and food preparation. Drinking or washing with water from a private well that has been flooded can make you sick. Use bottled water for drinking and cooking until your well is safe to use again. If you must use the well water for drinking or food preparation before the well has been disinfected and tested, the water must be boiled at a rolling boil for at least 5 minutes before use.

If your well has been flooded, you should immediately refrain from drinking the water and take the following steps:

1. After flushing the chlorine from the system, collect a water sample and submit it to a certified laboratory for coliform bacteria analysis.
2. Contact your local health department for further assistance if needed.

Inspect the well and pump

Conditions at the Well - Sediment and floodwater may enter the well through the well cap and contaminate it. Older or shallow wells are likely to be contaminated, even if there is no apparent damage. Well pits can be very hazardous- people have died from asphyxiation or electrocution in well pits. Before entering any well pit, please obtain professional help or guidance on proper safety precautions.

Electrical System - After floodwaters have receded and the pump and electrical system have dried, make certain a qualified electrician, well contractor or pump contractor checks the equipment's wiring before you turn it on. You can be shocked or damage your well or pump if they have been flooded.

Pump Operation - Sediment and floodwater can damage pumps and their electrical components. Get assistance from a well or pump contractor who will know how to clean, repair, or maintain different types of pumps.

Clean and flush the well

Once the flooding recedes, remove mud, silt, and other debris from around the top of the well. The pump may need to be removed so that mud and silt can be removed from the bottom of the well. Begin flushing the water system. Hook a hose up to an outside faucet or a faucet near the water storage tank and flush the water for at least 2 hours after the water clears up. If a large volume of flood water entered the well, several hours of pumping may be needed. Once the water is clear at the storage tank, flush the home distribution piping.

Disinfect the well

Drilled, driven, or bored wells - It is best to have a well contractor disinfect these wells because it is difficult for the private owner to thoroughly disinfect them.

Dug wells - Do not attempt to disinfect or use a dug well that has been flooded.

CAUTION: Wells can become contaminated in a number of different ways, including bacteria, wastewater from malfunctioning septic systems, or chemicals seeping into the ground. So taking long-range precautions is necessary, including repeated testing, to protect the safety of drinking water.

Water testing

After flushing the chlorine from the system, collect a water sample and submit it to a certified laboratory for coliform bacteria analysis. Homeowners should periodically test their drinking water for coliform bacteria. An annual test is recommended (or more frequently if the taste, odor, or water clarity changes). Coliform bacteria (common in the intestines of warm-blooded animals) are indicators of the potential for disease-causing organisms to be present in the water supply. Tests for metals, petroleum products, pesticides, and other chemicals are also available from state or privately operated laboratories. Water sample bottles, information about which test may be most appropriate for your situation, and interpretation of water test results are available from your local health department.

If your water system was completely depressurized during a power outage or if your well was flooded, it is especially important to check the water quality before continuing to consume the water. The water is considered safe for drinking after two consecutive samples, collected 8 hours apart, show that coliform bacteria are not present.

Temporary water supply

If your water system was depressurized during interruption of electrical power or if flooding of the well has occurred, the water should not be consumed until testing has verified that it is potable (fit to drink). Here are some alternatives to ensure that you and your family have a safe temporary drinking water supply until your water system is restored:

- Keep a supply of bottled water on hand as emergency drinking water. A few 5-gallon pails filled with water and stored in your basement are helpful for toilet flushes and other nonpotable uses during power outages.
- Water can be boiled to kill any harmful microorganisms. Bring the water to a rolling boil for at least 2 minutes; then let it cool. Pouring the water back and forth between two clean containers will reaerate the water and freshen the taste.
- Water can be disinfected with household chlorine bleach (unscented) by applying 10 drops of bleach per gallon of water. Allow at least 4 hours of contact time before drinking. Avoid attempting to disinfect turbid or cloudy water.
- A portable water filtration/purification unit (available at camping or backpacking stores) can be used to prepare small amounts of drinking water. These rely on a hand-operated pump to force the water through a filter (typically less than one quart per minute). Be sure that the unit will remove microorganisms down to 0.3 microns in size. Carefully follow the filter manufacturer's instructions.

CONSUMER'S GUIDE TO HIRING A WELL CONTRACTOR

Do you need a water well for the new home you're building? Does your existing well or pumping equipment need to be replaced? Here is some helpful information to assist you when hiring a water well driller or pump installer.

Does Michigan have water well construction standards?

Yes. Michigan's well construction code is based on the public health principle that if a well is properly located, constructed of suitable materials, and pumping equipment is correctly installed, the water system should provide a safe, reliable supply of water.

Some counties have ordinances that are more stringent than the state well construction code and all counties require that a permit be obtained before drilling a well or performing major repairs. Permits are required by state law for most wells that serve to the public or private citizens. Check with your county health department before proceeding.

The Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) registers water well drilling contractors and pump installers. Minimum experience qualifications and an extensive examination help ensure that only knowledgeable individuals become registered.

How to select a well drilling contractor

A new well and pump costs several thousand dollars. Before deciding who to hire, do a little homework to compare quality and value. It will be time "well" spent. To verify if a contractor is registered, ask to see a current registration certificate. State registration can be verified online by visiting the DEQ website at: www.michigan.gov/deqwaterwellconstruction and clicking on "Directory of Registered Contractors."

Check the contractors reputation by contacting past customers. Find out if the contractor completed the work satisfactorily and in a timely manner. A reputable contractor will have no objection to giving you a list of customers' names upon request.

Questions to ask the contractor

- ✓ What will be the depth of my new well? (A contractor cannot always predict the final depth, but depths of nearby wells offer some guidance.)
- ✓ Are there water quality or quantity problems in my area?
- ✓ Will the water be tested and will I be given a copy of the water test results?
- ✓ Will a well record be given to me within 60 days of completion, as required by state law? (A well record shows the well construction details and formations penetrated. It is useful if future well service is needed and during real estate transfers.)
- ✓ Do I still pay if no water is found, if not enough water is found, or if poor quality water is obtained? If so, how much is charged?
- ✓ How much will it cost to plug my abandoned well? (A well no longer in use can be a channel for contamination and can adversely impact your new well and others.)
- ✓ Do you use written estimates and contracts for our mutual protection?
- ✓ Do you carry insurance to protect both of us?
- ✓ Will I be given a detailed billing invoice?
- ✓ Will the contractor obtain the well permit from the local health department or will that be my responsibility?
- ✓ How much site restoration will be done? (Well drilling rigs and support vehicles can make large ruts in lawns. The drilling process can be messy. Make sure you know what the contractor will do and what you will be expected to do.)

Know what to expect: check well records.

Records of other wells completed in your vicinity are an indicator of what you can expect. There are two websites where well records can be viewed:

Wellogic (2000 and newer)
https://secure1.state.mi.us/wellogic/Login.aspx
All of the Wellogic records can be searched for by using 22 different search fields.

Scanned Well Records (1999 and older)
www.deq.state.mi.us/well-logs
The scanned well records can only be search for by county, township, town/range, and section.

Make sure that you, the contractor, and the local health department sanitarian are in agreement over the location of the new well. A well must be located where it is not subject to contamination and where it is accessible for maintenance. The driller must be able to get a drilling rig set up while avoiding overhead or buried utility lines. The location you had in mind may not be far enough from contamination sources such as septic systems, sewer lines, and fuel storage tanks. If you are having a well drilled to replace a contaminated well, be sure to let the well drilling contractor know. Tell the contractor about any special water needs you have. If you plan to install a lawn irrigation system, the contractor must know beforehand so the water system can be properly designed.

Good communication between you and the well drilling contractor is the key to successful job completion!

Got a complaint?

Usually the well installation will be completed satisfactorily. However, if the work was not performed to your satisfaction, discuss your concerns with the contractor. Most often when you bring your problem to the attention of the business, you will find them willing to listen to your complaint and eager to settle it to your satisfaction. When you talk to the contractor, remember:

- Be calm and courteous.
- Explain the problem accurately and state how you think it should be handled.
- In many disputes neither side is entirely correct.
- If you are willing to negotiate, say so.
- If your attempt to resolve the problem fails, you may file a written complaint with the local health department. You may wish to advise the contractor that you intend to file a complaint.

How to file a complaint

A written complaint can be filed by contacting your county or district health department. If your complaint involves violation of the well construction code, it is within the health department's authority and an investigation will be made. The health department will assist in getting the violation corrected.

The health department has no power to investigate or mediate certain types of complaints. These include:

- pricing or "overcharging"
- product warranties
- damage to property
- contractual disputes

Drinking Water Analysis

Initial testing of drinking water looks for coliform organisms. If coliform is present, further testing is done to determine if E.coli is one of the coliform organisms found.

Total Coliform Bacteria

Although generally not harmful, they are common in the environment in places such as surface water, soil, decaying vegetation and the intestinal tract of warm blooded animals.

A positive result

- May indicate a problem with the water distribution system, and the possibility of the presence of other harmful disease causing organisms.

E. Coli

An organism that is always found in the intestinal tract of mammals or birds.

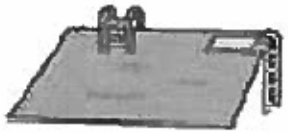
A positive result

- Indicates it is more likely that the water may contain disease-causing organisms resulting from fecal contamination.

Total Coliform/E.coli test: $19.00/sample

It is also recommended that the water be tested anytime there is a change to the system.

Swimming Pool Water Analysis



Coliform bacteria are an indicator of other possible disease causing organisms that may be present in the pool or spa water, due to:

Inadequate amounts of disinfectant in the pool
Increased bather load
Usage of the pool by infected persons
Failure of the water treatment system.

Sampling Procedures

- Samples should be collected when swimmers are in the pool, preferably during periods of peak usage.
- All pool and spa samples must be collected in a clean, sterile bottle provided by your local health department.
- Collect samples 12" to 18" inches below water surface in a sweeping motion holding the bottle by the bottleneck.
- Sample must be received at the lab within 24 hours of sampling.

Pool/ Spa Water Analysis: $19.00/sample

Surface Water/ Recreational Water Analysis

When swimming in water with high bacterial levels, the risk of becoming ill increases.

Flu-like symptoms and upper respiratory illnesses are frequently associated with swimming in contaminated water.

Pollution in beach water is often much higher during and immediately after rainstorms due to rainwater runoff.

Your local health department office can tell you if and when the water at your beach is monitored, and where the results are posted.

Sampling Procedures

- Collect samples 12" to 18" inches below water surface in a sweeping motion holding the bottle by the bottleneck.
- Sample must be received at the lab within 8 hours of sampling.

Surface Water Analysis: $23.00/sample
